Chair's Comments

MINISTER NKOSAZANA DLAMINI ZUMA

PLENARY SESSIONS ON WEHAB 26 – 28 AUGUST 2002

WORLD SUMMIT ON SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT

The central task of our deliberations at the Johannesburg Summit is to take stock of the successes and failures of the past ten years and agree on clear and practical measures to implement sustainable development. In our collective efforts to move from commitments to action to ensure more sustainable livelihoods for all, water and sanitation, energy, health, agriculture and biodiversity represent five specific areas where concrete results are both essential and achievable. These and other important areas of implementation should be seen against the urgent need to mobilise the necessary crosscutting means of implementation.

May I express my heartfelt thanks to the experts who collaborated in the preparation of the Implementation Framework Papers and for their presentations. Their inputs as well as those of the major groups, were of a high quality, which in turn enhanced our dialogue during our interactive sessions. I would also like to thank the Special Envoy of the UN Secretary General to the WSSD, Mr Jan Pronk who did an exceptional job in moderating this rich dialogue, as well as all the participants.

The innovative nature of these discussions should be encouraged as a model for enhanced multi-stakeholder participation and engagement within the UN system. This is the time for concrete action and all who can and should play a role should be able to engage fully and at all levels with each other and with the modalities of implementation in the follow-up after the Johannesburg Summit.

The process started by the implementation frameworks should harness the resources and technologies at our disposal, in governments and in all major groups, towards real implementation, in the spirit of partnership, equitable participation and mutual benefit. The concrete initiatives and partnerships announced by some delegations are welcomed and we will make available to all delegates a systematic list of all initiatives that have been proposed during the Summit. All must look forward to more specific announcements during the remainder of the Summit.

The results of our deliberations will be made available in the form of a Chairperson's Summary. It is hoped that this would assist delegations in the further implementation of sustainable development and follow-up as agreed in Johannesburg.

The key highlights from each session were as follows:

Important common themes have emerged from all the sessions:

- The need for sound policies and strategies, and proper consultation with all affected members of communities in policy formulation and decision-making for sustainable development.
- The need to build and strengthen partnerships not only amongst governments but also with women, youth, indigenous peoples, NGOs, local authorities, trade unions, business, science and farmers.
- The need for capacity building and technology sharing;
- The mobilisation of additional resources to achieve systematic and predictable funding.
- The need for practical programmes and actions, with clear, time-bound targets and timeframes as well as a well co-ordinated system of measurement, monitoring and reporting.
- The need for infrastructure development
- The need to improve institutional frameworks for better implementation and participation, particularly by vulnerable groups.

There should be a strong focus on follow-up from all parties involved, also keeping in mind that WEHAB is an initiative from the Secretary General. The WEHAB frameworks would be part of the implementation of the Johannesburg Plan of Implementation. It is thus proposed that the Summit invite the Secretary General to initiate consultations with all relevant and interested governments and parties, on translating the frameworks into action through a flexible action-oriented process.
